Employee Recognition/ Involvement STEP 2

Safety is a behavioral science not an engineering or technical science. The vast majority of things that cause employees to get hurt are behavioral in nature. Unfortunately, behavior is one of the hardest things to change, especially if employees have been allowed to develop bad habits. These habits usually go unnoticed or unchanged until someone has had an accident. Once this has happened we often try to determine blame, instead of finding the root cause. Most of the time the causes are easy to see if we only open our eyes and start observing why our employees do what they do.

One of the best ways to determine why employees behave the way they do is simply to ask them. When you observe employees working in an unsafe manner and ask them about their behavior they will often times provide you with legitimate reasons. These reasons need to be addressed with them in a positive manner. Listen, act and then follow up. For more information visit our website at www.hunterconsulting.com
